

The consensus of many residents I listen to is that the city needs a somewhat different outlook on the city council – a person who can relate to the vast majority of the residents.

Many neighborhoods are now overcrowded with insufficient parking and inadequate green space within walking distance. Traffic safety continues to be a challenge and needs to be further addressed while more roads must continue to be upgraded.

Many small businesses are still reaching out to the government for help, and our city must be able to provide more assistance and be further attuned to their problems.

I'd like to serve Glendale again as the spokesperson for the average hard-working residents who continue to want a safe city and good quality of life for their children. I've been involved in the city for decades, both in private and public sectors, and am familiar with the strengths and weaknesses of our city.

Just like you, I care deeply about our city, and I want the best for Glendale. I have the knowledge, education, experience, and eagerness to improve our quality of life. My decisions will be based on what's right for Glendale. Let's work together in that direction.
